Excerpt: . . . himself to be about midway between the two shores. The height and length of the seas aided this impression; and it must be added that Cap by this time began to feel a respect for fresh water which twenty-four hours earlier he would have derided as impossible. Just as the nigh. turned, the fury of the wind became so great that he four d it impossible to bear up against it, the water falling on the deck of the little craft in such masses as to cause it to poake to the centre, and, though a vessel of singularly liv. V qualities, to threaten to bury it beneath its weight. Thh people of the Scud averred that never before had they beev out in such a tempest, which was true; for, possessing a perfect knowledge of all the rivers and headlands and nans,...
