Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: .than we found it, and transmit that improvement in vital force to posterity is the true evolution by which hereditary taints may be abolished. In my student days a cruel pathology was taught that certain constitutions were doomed to hereditary diseases, and distinct line of demarcation were drawn between those so affected and others. Logically, that doctrine can only be sustained in a limited sense. Inter-marriage must so mix up blood that no constitution could long remain free from taint. Death is the complement of life. All living bodies have their stages of growth, maturity and decay. So all parts of the body go through the same stages. The blood scales, the muscular fibres, the epithelial scales live their time, are cast off, and succeeded by others, often better ones. Thus death is not only the end but the beginning of life. That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die, is a philosophical truth, and lies at the root of all improvement of the race, as well as at the root of all Christian faith. The last stage of the journey to this inevitable goal, like all the other stages, has its peculiar troubles, diseases and dangers. How these troubles may be relieved, these diseases avoided, and this stage of life made easier and longer, should be the constant and thoughtful study of every practitioner of medicine.
