Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .stockade topped with barbed wire thrown around the Lytle Mill is a grim reminder of the owner s battle with the shingle-weavers. The men lost. Union members were locked out, wages reduced, behind the stockade. Another mill, guarded by a black, sluggish river as by a moat, cannot be approached except over a bridge, easily defended. Behind these fortifications the victorious owners felt secure. In February of this year, after the free speech fight, the employees of one mill struck for more wages. Immediately the guards at the gate of the Ltle Mill, as yet unaffected, were doubled. No agitators were to be allowed within the stockade. But the agitators did not ask for permission. A hundred and fifty Industrial Workers hurled themselves against the supposedly impregnable walls. By means of long planks and team work they reached the top, cut the barbed wire, poured into the mill. They pulled the whistle cord, swept the workers before them out of the shops, and escaped through the gates in the crowd. The mill was closed down. Others suffered the same fate. With ax handles and wagon spokes, with shotguns and beatings, with deportations and threats, the employers answered. The more frequent, the harder the blows, the more Greeks and Finns joined the I. W. W. Though no formal peace treaty was made, the strikers returned to work when wages were raised from $2 to $2.25 a day. Two years ago, soon after the Government s peonage prosecutions,...
