Your life is not the route for such a one; Your guide-posts merely mock him riddewise; Your rules are not the vestments that will fit The lithe, quick-darting movements of his soul. He wearies on your smoothest, proudest street; He sickens where your dull, gray pavement runs; And, tho he help you drive your market-wain, Bending him to the work with honest zeal - One moment's pause; his heart breaks, and he dies. Think of him as the bearer of a cup Wherein the wine of being, seething up, Sparkled with iridescence as it flowed To warm his fellow travellers of the road, To cheer the jaded, animate the dull - His heart, the cup, alas no longer full.
